Counting Youth Experiencing Homelessness More Effectively

- Traditional Point-in-Time Count methodologies are believed to significantly undercount youth.
- Federal partners are encouraging communities to implement youth-centered methods including:
 - Youth involvement in the count
 - Participation of school homeless liaisons and Runaway and Homeless Youth agencies to identify homeless youth and hard-to-reach youth
 - Gather Specific data on characteristics of unaccompanied youth

Key Strategies for Making Progress in Our Communities

California Policy Academy on Chronic Homelessness

- Funded by SAMHSA to advance state level activities for reducing chronic homelessness.
- Georgia, Louisiana, and Washington State also participating.
- SAMHSA, HUD, and USICH have been active federal partners in planning process
- Continuing communication with CalHFA, HCD, and other state agencies to implement strategies focused on improving targeting and expanding supply of permanent supportive housing, strengthening crisis response system in communities, and opportunities for integrating health care and housing activities

HOME Matters

Looks at three essential connections between home and health:

- 1. The impact of stable affordable homes on health
- 2. The value of supportive housing, with health services provided at home
- 3. The cost effectiveness of health care that prevents homelessness
- Chronically homeless individuals are "Super-Utilizers" that cost taxpayers money, divert services in hospitals and do not address systemic issues
 - Providing housing for a subset of homeless individuals is cheaper and better for society

Local Initiatives

- Rapid Results Boot Camps
- Home for Good in LA
- Mayor's Initiative in Fresno
- HACLA and HACOLA homeless preferences
- San Diego's CoC is adopting a new governance structure to increase crosssector coordination and leveraging

Being Strategic, Making Progress

- Data: Improve data and drive toward results
- Targeting: Better align interventions based on needs and strengths
- Evidence: Implement evidence-informed practices, including Housing First
- Investments: Deploy investments purposefully
- Mainstream Resources: Engage and integrate mainstream resources with targeted homeless programs
